

"The surge in the ranking is something that we all can be proud of as we are not only listed, but have shown improvement over the years.

"I hope that we can further boost the academic and employer reputation to enable UUM's ranking to remain elevated," he said.

The Vice-Chancellor expressed hopes that the campus community would continue to work towards ensuring that the other agenda of the university will be successful realised. He also reiterated that there was still much to be done to place UUM on par with the world's leading universities.

According to him, all UUM denizens had been working tirelessly by demonstrating their steadfast commitment in ensuring that the university's agenda was successful realised, this in turn had brought about a huge impact on the university.

In its first issue of 2012, QSWUR Under 50 listed the best universities less than 50 years based on the latest QS World University Rankings.
